SIGNS, SIGNS, everywhere a sign

Braeden Jones
Metro | Winnipeg

The City of Winnipeg has a policy to regulate digital signs and billboards, but that hasn't stopped flashy ads from popping up everywhere.

The city's property and development committee heard Tuesday the reason is the policy is more often than not ignored by the Board of Adjustment (BOA), which is a civic appointed body that approves the applications.

City planners make recommendations based on whether signs meet the regulations council adopted in 2012 — including whether it meets standards of size, location and operation — but those recommendations are routinely ignored.

Chief planner Braden Smith said the proliferation of signs despite regulations has a "deleterious effect" on streets and negatively affects traffic safety.

"We think the regulation is good," Smith said. "(But) there is a disconnect where we are recommending something, a rejection of a certain application for example ... and the board of adjustment, as a decision making body, doesn't concur with our recommendation."

Since the policy was adopted, there have been 50 digital billboard applications submitted to the city — Smith and the planning department approved and rejected half.

But the BOA ultimately approved 41 of the applications anyway.

The same trend extends to 32 digit-sign applications, of which city planners rejected 13, only to have the BOA approve 30 of them. Coun. John Orlikow, who chairs the committee, said it's frustrating and "really negates the whole purpose of (the city's) policy."

"We found that balance between those that want the Las Vegas of the North, versus other ones who will want to have the Paris of the North," Orlikow said. "We found what I call the Winnipeg balance in this policy, but the policy is mute if the regulatory body isn't actually following it."

The committee tasked administration with reporting back on options for enforcing the policy, including turning final approval over to the planning director, as well as a full review of the BOA and what they override in other areas. "I want to address this specific issue right now because it's right in front of our faces, but there may be a requirement to look at the

City policies on digital signs are easily flouted broader issue about the BOA," Orlikow said.

There's also an issue with enforcing signs that don't adhere to the city's policy.

Inspections manager Stan Dueck said the mechanisms for enforcement don't allow the city to adequately address issues, especially given how many signs there are now.

"There's two issues on enforcement, one is an illegally established sign where it needs to be moved or made legal, that is perhaps a little more easy to enforce," he explained.

"When it comes to the operational use of the sign ... our enforcement tools are not quite set up for that."

Dueck added the city can issue compliance orders, but they are easy to ignore.

PROJECT

Activities to receive boost in the Year of Reconciliation

Shane Gibson
Metro | Winnipeg

Traditional Indigenous plant life and historic prairie flora are making a return to downtown Winnipeg's concrete urban landscape.

Volunteers spent a few hours Tuesday planting hundreds of plants — all chosen with the help of members of the city's Aboriginal community — in the planters in front of Air Canada Park and the Aboriginal Peoples' Television Network (APTN) building on Portage Avenue at Carlton Street.

"We really tried to go with plants that would look good in a garden setting but also have some traditional value to them," said Melanie Andrushko from Downtown Winnipeg BIZ, which partnered with the city and APTN on the project.

"So things like sweetgrass, which has a very traditional use for a lot of Aboriginal people, as well as prairie sage, and cedar — they're all to my knowledge plants that have been used for a very long time for healing purposes and for traditional smudging purposes."

Andrushko said in all, 20 different varieties of plants were chosen for the garden beds, and

We would like to include more of the art and culture of our indigenous peoples' in our city and this is one little aspect of that.

Melanie Andrushko from Downtown Winnipeg BIZ

somewhere in the neighbourhood of 200 individual plants went into the planters with the help of volunteers like Carrington Desjarlais from Ma Mawi Wi Chi Itata Centre.

"I think it shows that we're all connected in this area and I know the medicines will help people in the long run because they are traditional healing medicines," said Desjarlais, 22. "Especially for Aboriginal people living downtown, because most of them don't have access to this kind of medicine because they live in the inner city, but if it's here it can be easily accessible."

This is the second year the Indigenous gardens have been planted at the spot, and Andrushko said she hopes the program can grow to see more traditional plants hit the dirt at other locations throughout the downtown in the coming years.

"We would like to include more of the art and culture of our Indigenous peoples' in our city and this is one little aspect of that," she said. "And of course it looks gorgeous as well."

Ma Mawi Wi Chi Itata Centre volunteer Carrington Desjarlais, 22, helps to fill the planters outside Air Canada Park and APTN with traditional prairie and indigenous plants Tuesday.

City wins transport strategy award

The City of Winnipeg has won a national award for its pedestrian and cycling strategy.

The Canadian Institute of Planners has given the city its 2016 Award for Planning for Pedestrian and Cycling Strategies, in the category of Sustainable Mobility, Transportation, and Infrastructure.

"Walking, cycling, and a winter city may appear disparate," reads a release from the institute issued Tuesday. "Yet Winnipeg's Pedestrian and Cycling Strategy offers a well-researched and presented all season active transportation plan."

"The compendium of best practices, drawing from research and implementation, provides an accessible reference."

After much contention, city council approved the 20-year $334-million plan to improve walking and cycling networks around the city last summer.

This year, council approved $6 million worth of studies and work to be done on bike paths and sidewalks as part of its annual to-do list. Winnipeg's award is one of five given out by the institute this year to recognize planning projects for their excellence, innovation, impact on the profession, implementation potential and overall presentation. SHANE GIBSON/METRO

Drivers wait for one of the many trains to pass at Waverley Street and Taylor Avenue, which is where the city has OK'd building a $155-million underpass. DAVID LIPNOWSKI/ FOR METRO

Waverley underpass expropriations a go

DEVELOPMENT

Plan OK'd, but will still require nod from council

The Waverley underpass project is meant to improve traffic flows between Taylor and Wilkes avenues, but first the City of Winnipeg has to seize some land to get in there and build it.

In order to begin pre-construction work this year, the city's property and development committee gave its stamp of approval to the expropriation of several parcels of land, Tuesday.

Chairman Coun. John Orlikow said the city has worked closely with the landowners and made concessions during consultation so far, and "the only purpose of (the expropriation) is to ensure that we've got access to the land."

That's why city officials have asked the province to waive the normally required expropriation inquiry and hearings.

Orlikow said negotiations should suffice, since there already have been "a number of public consultations and meetings" since consultation on the project started in 2014.

City real estate manager John Zabudney said the city will continue to negotiate with property owners, but "can't afford any delays" given the compressed timeframe and planned 2019 completion date.

"We need title to the land, that does not preclude us from negotiating any form of settlement whatsoever, it's just title is critical at this point in time to proceed," Zabudney said.

"We can probably shave off approximately three to four months in expropriation time (by waiving inquiries)."

After the project is complete and the need for an access road and staging area expires, the city will relinquish the majority of the land.

Planning, property and development director, John Kieran, said the expropriation without inquiries would help achieve "reasonable access timelines" and give the city the "ability to be on the lands this year in preparation for full construction in 2017."

The $155-million project will replace the at-grade CN railway crossing at Waverley Street and Taylor Avenue with an underpass, and refurbish both of those roadways, including widening Taylor to four lanes between Waverley and Lindsay Street.

The expropriations still require approval from city council as a whole.

PRESERVATION

City close to naming its first heritage conservation district

A designation that was formerly reserved only for buildings can now be assigned to entire neighbourhoods, and the City of Winnipeg is close to doing so for the first time.

On Tuesday, a city committee approved a draft plan to designate Armstrong's Point, or The Gates, as a heritage conservation district.

"This will be the first heritage district in Winnipeg," Coun. Jenny Gerbasi said, noting the significance of what that means in terms of the ability to preserve the neighbourhood's historic homes.

The designation would also influence how future development happens.

City staff intend to finalize a plan by September.

TRANSIT

Hydro land prices may triple: city

Manitoba Hydro apparently has a "no lowball offers" policy — one that recently added about $16 million to the city's rapid transit plans.

The City of Winnipeg has been negotiating with the utility provider over the purchase price of land needed for the second stage of the Southwest Rapid Transitway expansion.

Originally, city planners pegged the land's value at about $4.6 million, but Hydro countered with an estimation more than five times greater: As much as $34 million.

The two sides have since reached a compromise, agreeing that it's worth a maximum of $20.4 million, which is still far greater than the $16 million budgeted for land acquisitions overall.

Luckily, city officials said, savings found elsewhere in the bus expansion project make up for the unexpected cost.

"Within any given project there are deviations from expected costs, both on the plus side and the unfavourable side," transit director, Dave Wardrop, said. "We are confident we will be able to deliver the project well within budget."

The city's chief operating officer, Michael Jack, said he appreciated Hydro bugged as much as it did, especially since the city can't expropriate the land.

"There are a number of entities beyond our jurisdiction, and Manitoba Hydro (being a crown corporation) is one of those," Jack said. "That has framed the entire negotiation."

Wardrop said that land valuations are complex, and Hydro's counter was fair-game.

"Different methodologies can be applied, different positions are taken, some more aggressive... some less aggressive," he said. "What we think we landed with here is a fair valuation overall for those properties."

Coun. John Orlikow said he's "concerned" with the jump in the land valuation, but doesn't question Hydro's right to counter the city's estimate.

With Wardrop's promise that savings in other elements of the project would offset the over-spending on property acquisition, Orlikow and the planning and development committee forwarded the report to council for final approval. BRAEDEN JONES/METRO

Sex trafficking 'getting worse'

EXPLOITATION

Indigenous girls as young as nine being lured: Expert

Austin Grabish
For Metro | Winnipeg

Girls as young as nine are being bought and sold on Winnipeg streets and in shopping malls for sex, a community forum on sex-trafficking recently heard.

The startling revelation was made by Diane Redsky, former project director for the National Task Force on Sex Trafficking of Women and Girls in Canada.

Redsky is the executive director of the city's Ma Mawi Wi Chi Itata Centre, which has a safe house for survivors escaping the sex trade.

She said in Winnipeg, girls, often of Indigenous descent, are entering the sex trade at an average age of 13, but she's worked with victims as young as nine, who have come off the streets.

"They share stories with us. They talk about being vulnerable and being recruited as young as nine," Redsky told Metro.

Redsky said pimps hang around local shopping malls looking for vulnerable girls, who are easy to lure into the sex trade.

"They're offering them, 'Hey wanna come to a party. Hey let me buy you something,'" she explained.

"The recruitment can be as simple as that, and it can happen over a very fast period ... where they've moved from the party to all of the sudden being in a different city, and that can happen within hours."

Bridget Perrier, 39, is from Toronto and entered the sex trade when she was just 12.

She still remembers the first time she was prostituted. "It was January, and it was really cold. It was minus 32, and we all took off from the group home," Perrier recalled.

"His name was Charlie, and basically he wanted a h--- --b from a girl that was a newbie. He paid us all $400, and that was easy money."

Perrier said it wasn't long before a madam spotted her. "She started a conversation with me and the next thing you knew I was being flown out to Halifax, Nova Scotia."

She said nobody stopped her at the airport despite her young age. "I was 12 years old buying a ticket and being able to fly by myself without ID."

"Some of the women that worked in the (brothel) wouldn't work with me because of my age and because ... they had children the same age as me."

Redsky said sex-trafficking is highly profitable and on the rise across the country.

"Sex-trafficking in Canada is not getting any better and in fact, it's getting worse," she said.

Gunilla Ekberg, a Swedish-Canadian lawyer, showed the crowd two websites that could be used to buy sex in Winnipeg.

Winnipeg police deputy chief Danny Smyth said police have an "overwhelming" time trying to monitor the sites.

"It's like going through a catalogue frankly of women and girls that are being exploited," he said.

This week's forum was part of a spring course on sex-trafficking at the University of Winnipeg.

+ THE OFFICIAL VIEW

Average age of sex-trade victim is 14, says province

The Government of Manitoba estimates that each year, hundreds of children and young adults are visibly exploited on Winnipeg's streets, with many more taken advantage of in what's called the "invisible sex trade", which happens behind-closed-doors of private home and in drug houses.

The province cites the average age of young victims exploited in the sex trade is 14. Many have ties to the children and family services system, are Indigenous, and experienced instances of homelessness, in which they turn to the sex trade as a means of providing themselves with food and money.

The province reports those lured into the illegal sex trade are exposed to numerous risks, such as:

- Violence, including sexual assault and murder
- Sexual transmitted diseases, unexpected pregnancies
- Gang involvement
- Mental health issues
- Long term-involvement with the criminal justice system, and dependency on government assistance

His name was Charlie, and basically he wanted a h--- --b from a girl that was a newbie. He paid us all $400, and that was easy money. Bridget Perrier, advocate, recalls her first time being sexually exploited

Brace for longer screening lines, flyers

AIRPORTS

Feds urged to boost funding for security checks

Canadians risk flight delays and even longer airport security lines unless Ottawa boosts screening funding to address growing passenger levels, industry experts are warning.

"It is on the cusp of being a real problem, with serious, serious delays," says John Gibson, chairman of the Canadian Airports Council.

Canadian airports aren't currently facing the chronic disruptions that are increasingly angering U.S. passengers. Still, lines have steadily grown over the last few years as Canadian funding hasn't kept pace with the 21 per cent increase in passenger growth over the last five years.

The Canadian Air Transport Security Authority (CATSA) says, on average, it screens 85 per cent of passengers within 15 minutes.

But waits can be much longer at some large airports during peak travel times, with additional pressure potentially coming during the rush of summer travel — and the number of passengers is growing by 3.5 per cent each year.

If nothing is done to address the bigger volumes, Gibson said, passenger waits could regularly reach an hour. The number of security screeners has in the past fluctuated depending on the size of government funding. More than 6,000 agents screened 58 million passengers last year.

The agency says it's doing the best it can with the resources it's provided by the government. An extra $29 million in the Liberal government's first budget will help to maintain the current threshold this year.

ASSISTED DYING

Senators balk at Bill C-14 limits

The federal government's proposed new law on medically assisted dying is entering uncharted parliamentary waters, where the only certainty seems to be that it will not come out in the same shape in which it goes in.

Final debate on Bill C-14 begins Wednesday in the Senate, where the government no longer has any control over independent-minded, less-partisan senators who appear determined to amend the controversial legislation.

Among other things, senators are likely to amend the bill to ensure that all grievously ill Canadians are entitled to an assisted death, not just those who are near death. But no one knows what will happen if the government, which has rejected any substantive amendments thus far, refuses to accept Senate amendments. Will senators acquiesce? Will they fight to defeat the bill? "I don't know — that's the simplest answer," said Sen. George Baker, who is sponsoring the bill in the Senate.

"I don't know what's going to happen in the Senate. This is a new situation for the Parliament of Canada. There's never been a situation similar to this before."

Conservative Senate leader Claude Carignan was blunt when asked if the bill will be passed by the Senate without amendments.

"Without? Impossible," he said.

Carignan appeared confident there's enough support among Conservative, independent Liberal and independent senators to fix what he sees as the bill's major flaw: the requirement that a person must be near death in order to qualify for medical help to end their suffering. That provision has been slammed by constitutional and legal experts who maintain it flies in the face of the Supreme Court's landmark ruling last year and will inevitably be struck down as unconstitutional.

Campaign looking ahead to November

U.S. POLITICS

Clinton eyes general election as presumptive nominee

Already the presumptive Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton pressed for victory in California and five other states Tuesday, while Bernie Sanders hoped a strong showing would raise doubts about her historic achievement and spur superdelegate to rally around him instead.

The Democratic race was coming to an end amid new turmoil in the Republican Party. GOP leaders recoiled at Donald Trump's comments about a Hispanic judge, with one senator even pulling his endorsement of the presumptive GOP nominee. Trump insisted his words had been "misconstrued" as an attack on people of Mexican heritage.

Clinton secured the 2,383 delegates she needed for the nomination on the eve of Tuesday's voting, according to an Associated Press tally. Her total is comprised of pledged delegates won in primaries and caucuses, as well as superdelegates — the party officials and officeholders who can back a candidate of their choosing.

"We are at the brink of a historic, historic unprecedented moment," she said during a rally in California on Monday.

Clinton was waiting until most of the voting was complete Tuesday night before fully revelling in becoming the first woman nominated by a major

U.S. political party.

She was to address supporters at a victory party in Brooklyn, where her campaign planned to run a gauzy video highlighting the achievements of women who helped clear a path.

Still, she was wasting no time moving toward the general election. Her campaign announced that she would make stops next week in Ohio and Pennsylvania, states that will be pivotal in November. Sanders spent Tuesday making a final round of campaign stops in California, the biggest prize of the day.

Stanford defends its handling of assault

Stanford University "did everything within its power" to ensure justice in the case of a former swimmer sentenced to six months in jail for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman, saying it moved swiftly to investigate and punish the student but that more needs to be done at the school and elsewhere to end sexual violence.

The university banned Brock Turner from campus after wrapping up its investigation less than two weeks after the attack, calling it "the harshest sanction that a university can impose on a student," according to a statement released Monday. The school says it reached out to the victim to offer support and inform her of the steps it was taking.

"In this case, Stanford University, its students, its police and its staff members did everything they could," the statement said, adding that it was proud of two students who stopped the January 2015 assault.

thrusting his hips into her." He said the woman was unconscious the entire time because he checked her and she "didn't move at all."

"The guy stood up then we saw she wasn't moving still. So we called him out on it. And the guy ran away, my friend Peter chased after him," Arndt said. The 20-year-old Turner was sentenced last week to six months in jail and three years' probation, sparking outrage from critics who say Santa Clara County Judge Aaron Persky was too lenient on a privileged athlete from a top-tier swimming program. ROSEMARY WESTWOOD ON THE RETURN OF A RALLYING CRY

Rape culture was a slogan that undermined its cause by being too vague. But this week, Dan Turner, the father of sex offender Brock Turner, has upended all that.

"Rape culture" had become a barren phrase.

Jargon and overused, chanted with abandon and often wielded with little insight, it had lately lost much of its meaning. Coined in the 1970s to describe how society implicitly condones sexual violence and blames victims, rape culture was the slogan that undermined its cause by being too vague.

But this week, Dan Turner has upended all that. He has given rape culture, as short-hand, a second wind — and a snappy quote few will soon forget.

Turner is the father of convicted sex offender Brock Turner. In front of a California courtroom, he dismissed his son's groping, fingering, humping and undressing of an unconscious woman behind a dumpster as a mere "20 minutes of action."

And with that, "rape culture" is back in the discourse with renewed vengeance.

Turner's statement spawned stories and made headlines across international media when it hit Twitter this weekend, after his son's conviction on three charges of sexual assault and the ensuing light sentence, a mere six months in jail plus probation.

Rape culture persists when perpetrators receive kid-glove treatment.

Like his son, who has never admitted guilt, Turner senior shows zero recognition of the assault time you miss an opportunity to educate our sons about the concept of consent ... you're perpetuat-

NOT A PARKING-LOT PREDATOR A prosecutor's comment that Brock Turner "may not look like a rapist" proves how pervasive misconceptions about sexual assault are, Rosemary Westwood writes.

DAN HONDA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

as such. He calls it the "unfortunate results" of campus binge drinking, deems it one of the "dangers... of sexual promiscuity."

There's nary a whiff of culpability. That makes Turner the poster boy for rape-culture-condoning parents.

Mashable's Chris Taylor explained phenomenon well. "Rape culture is a thing..." he wrote to fellow fathers. "Any time you put the onus on our daughters — don't wear that dress, don't get drunk, don't lead guys on — you're perpetuating it. Any time you make a rape joke, you're perpetuating it. And any ing it."

Amazingly, Dan A. Turner not only thinks his son shouldn't go to jail for ripping the underwear off a passed-out woman and groping and fingering her, he thinks his son should educate other students about sex and booze on campus.

Leslie Rasmussen, Brock's friend, was more explicit in her plea to the judge: "Brock is not a monster," she said in a statement. "Rape on campus isn't always because people are rapists," she added, ludicrously, explaining that Brock isn't a real rapist because he didn't kidnap his victim "as she is walking to her car in a parking lot."

The prosecutor was clearly expecting this kind of retrograde thinking when he told the jury during his closing arguments that Brock "may not look like a rapist," being young, white and privileged, "but he is the face of campus sexual assault."

The need to make that statement is proof of rape culture's existence. But it's Turner, the father, who's given it a new face.

A close runner-up isn't Rasmussen, but the judge. Judge Aaron Perksy clearly felt sorry for the convicted All-American swimmer formerly of Stanford University, the judge's own alma mater. In announcing a six-month sentence, compared to the six years requested by the prosecution, Perksy said Turner had "less moral culpability" because he was drunk and let him off easy because jail would be "severe." For that, he's earned infamy and more than 300,000 signatures on a petition demanding he be recalled. I hope it works.

Rape culture persists when perpetrators — especially white, athletic, good-looking ones — receive kid-glove treatment from judges who follow the old adage "boys will be boys." It endures while well-meaning people explain away the sexual violence of their loved ones.

But thanks to Turner's "20 minutes of action," rape culture has also returned to prominence as a war cry. It's been given new weight, and been rooted again in reality. The truth: A father excuses every assault when he excuses the one committed by his son.

A balloon ride taught me not be defined by illness

Samantha Emann
Metro | Toronto

If you had asked me two years ago whether I would go for a ride in a hot air balloon, I would have laughed.

But here I was, in Kitchener, Ont. at 5 a.m., listening to a pilot tell a group of soon-to-be passengers, myself included, how to brace for bumpy landing as we prepared to be lifted thousands of feet into the air.

I was there to participate in Parkinson Canada's Life Lists Challenge campaign where one could find themselves doing other bucket-list type things like skydiving and bungee jumping.

Participants raised much-needed money for research on a disease for which there is no known cure, for public education and to help support the more than 100,000 Canadians living with it. This event was unique, as you got to be inspired by a partner with Parkinson's, putting a human face to the fundraising efforts.

The world watched iconic figures like the late Muhammad Ali live with Parkinson's, but not let it define them. Ali will be remembered for his accomplishments and his many contributions to the society and time in which he lived, not for the tremors that affected him later in life.

Jon Collins, the organizer of the campaign, said the balloon challenge seemed to be relatable for all age groups for different reasons. He said the idea of doing something you want to tick off your bucket list would be a new way to engage younger people, particularly millennials.

"This could be you, this could be me, at this exact stage in my life looking to raise a young family, working hard on my career and then (facing) a diagnosis that I was absolutely not expecting."

Though Parkinson's affects everyone differently, some symptoms include tremors and problems with balance and motor skills.

The invisible symptoms of the disease, from fatigue to sleep disorders to other mental health issues, are equally challenging but not as often talked about.

That fact struck a chord with me.

After enduring bouts with depression and still fighting with anxiety, I am familiar with what it means to suffer from symptoms that aren't apparent to others. And having grappled with recent life-altering issues arising from my weight, I understand what it means to feel like you are fighting your own body.

I don't want to be the sum of my medical issues. I used to think going up in a hot air balloon would be out of the question. But after this? Sign me up for the next challenge!

I don't want to be the sum of my medical issues.

Wake up your cooking with coffee

Park the skepticism — coffee pairs surprisingly well with fresh salad vinaigrettes as well as the tanginess of limes when used as a rub for grilled chicken legs. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

As the days stretch toward summer solstice on June 20 and the weather starts making all of us sleepy, try adding a zip to your cooking with coffee. In addition to an extra caffeine hit, you'll taste the warm, bitter aromas of coffee that go very well with some unlikely dishes.

It's already a given that coffee intensifies cocoa (try adding espresso powder to chocolate cake batter) and that it's an essential ingredient in desserts like tiramisu, but consider the flavour profile of coffee: bitter, slightly acidic and earthy.

Use it to balance out citrus and vinegary flavours; complement the smoky taste of smoked meats or grilled vegetables; contrast sugary desserts like ice cream and custards (affogato, anyone?); and enhance the nuttiness of caramels and brittles.

Summer is all about grilling, citrus notes and using the oven as least as possible. These recipes for a coffee-infused meal will keep you buzzed well past the sunset.

Grilled Lime and Coffee Chicken Legs

Lime marinades and coffee rubs are popular flavour choices for barbecues; try combining them for a complex, zesty way to flavour chicken legs.

The tanginess of lime hits the tongue but then the bitter-sweet coffee-sugar rub starts to shine.

(Makes 6 servings)

Ingredients:

- 1/4 cup (60 mL) fine coffee grounds
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) salt
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) sweet paprika
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) brown sugar
- 1 1/2 tbsp (22 mL) black pepper

- Juice and zest of 4 limes
- 2 finely minced garlic cloves
- 6 bone-in, skin-on chicken legs, trimmed of excess fat and skin, rinsed and patted dry with paper towels
- Chopped cilantro, for garnish
- Lime slices, for garnish

Directions:

1. In a large resealable plastic bag, add coffee, salt, paprika, brown sugar, black pepper, lime juice and zest and garlic. Massage bag to mix evenly. Add chicken, seal bag and massage to marinate chicken.

Refrigerate for minimum two hours or overnight.

2. When ready to cook, remove chicken from bag and brush off excess rubs.

3. If using a charcoal grill, arrange coals on one side of grill and bring to medium-high heat. If using a gas grill, turn off one burner after grill has reached medium-high temperature. Sear chicken legs on hot side of grill for 4 to 5 minutes per side. Transfer to cool side of grill and cover, flipping occasionally until legs are fully cooked with an internal temperature of 165 F (75 C), about 20 to 25 minutes.

4. If not using outdoor grill, sear legs on a grill pan over medium-high heat. Turn heat down to medium, cover and flip occasionally until fully cooked.

5. Remove from heat and transfer to serving platter.

6. Garnish with lime slices and chopped cilantro. Let rest for 5 minutes before serving.

ANIMALS

Pet 'parents' taking a page out of human name books

Erin Kobayashi
Special to Torstar

In April, model Chrissy Teigen announced the birth of her daughter, Luna, with John Legend. I love the name Luna, it's feminine, celestial and easy to pronounce in many languages.

It's also the name of my dog — because Luna is clearly a dog name. It's an even better cat name (the Harry Potter and Sailor Moon reference became so popular that Toronto Cat Rescue advised fosters to stop naming their cats Luna). Or so I thought.

I began thinking of Luna's canine playmates and the list sounded like a kindergarten attendance sheet: Sophia, Ella, Riley, Oliver and Jack, and noticed that the top licensed cat, and even more so, dog names seemed to be taking cues from BabyCenter.ca's most popular baby names lists.

When my friend revealed that Edith was the front-runner name for her baby, I could only think of an acquaintance's hyperactive miniature pinscher-pug mix named Edith who appeared to run battery operated.

Are the days of Fido and Lassie dog-gone? While traditional dog and cat names like Buddy and Coco still rank high among licensed pets, I'm guessing their owners may be mature in age. Let's face it, you don't have to be a spring chicken to become a pet "parent." And I understand the appeal of modern baby names for dog owners because unlike cat owners, we are constantly addressing them in public.

We are still trying to figure out what a pet is.

James K. Stanescu

In a 2011 poll by Purina Dog Chow, 90 per cent of owners considered their dogs members of the family, so it isn't surprising pet owners are favouring trendy baby names since, culturally, they hold a special place in our hearts (and unique space in our homes).

"Companion animals are not wild animals, nor are they domesticated in the sense of farm animals. So, we have pets, which are like mini-humans to us," explains James K. Stanescu, a lecturer specializing in animal and environmental ethics in Philosophy at American University in Washington, D.C.

According to the same 2011 survey, 40 per cent of owners refer to themselves as "mom" and "dad" to their canine companions and I have noticed that descriptors like "fur baby," "practice baby," "first born" and "the roommate" are widely used.

"I think we have slowly tended to want to see pets as more of a member of the family," says Stanescu, "We give them more human names, as opposed to the old nicknames that we give to farm animals. But we also avoid calling them pets.

"They are fur babies, roommates, etc. We are still trying to figure out what a pet is, as opposed to a wild animal or a farm animal, both of which are categories that go back thousands of years."

While Stanescu points out that giving names to animals helps us recognize them as individuals, calling them fur babies and roommates is a stretch — considering our pets lack basic human rights.

"I think we have hard ethical choices we have to make about what it means to live with other animals that we have complete control over," Stanescu says.

"I worry that calling them fur babies or children or roommates is a way of dodging this really complicated ethical activity." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

CANINE DINING

Chow goes gourmet as Fido feasts on filet mignon too

Imagine a warm, fragrant entree of oven-baked chicken with whole-grain brown rice, steamed yellow squash and pan-wilted spinach.

Or slow-roasted leg of lamb with pearl barley, broccoli and crispy whole-wheat croutons with cheddar cheese.

Those aren't offerings at a tony French bistro. They're on the menu at Chef K9's Doggy Bistro and Cafe in Pompano Beach, Florida, which customizes meals for your dog and sends them to you.

The subscription-based company is just one of dozens that offer canine and feline foods that go well beyond run-of-the-mill supermarket chow.

According to Packaged Facts, a researcher in Rockville, Maryland, the premium pet-food sector accounted for nearly half of the $26 billion U.S. pet-food market in 2013. Apparently, we want our pets to have not only a spot on the sofa but a figurative spot at the dinner table too.

Delicious-sounding dog and cat food recipes are just good marketing, says Chicago veterinarian Donna Solomon.

"The descriptions and the suggestions of wholesomeness, homemade and gourmet are aimed at our taste buds, not our pets'," she says.

Freeze-dried pet foods that you reconstitute with warm water or broth are also popular, says Sid Hawkins, a spokesman for Pet Pantry Warehouse in New Rochelle, New York. Owners like that the bags are less cumbersome than regular kibble bags, and are shelf-stable.

Primal Pet Foods offers a protein- and vitamin-rich freeze-dried blend of beef heart, liver and ground-up bones as well as dark green vegetables. There are line feasts, too, like Primal's organic kale, carrots and blueberries with chicken and salmon.

Honest Kitchen's got a turkey and parsnip or chicken and quinoa blend, as well as a fish and coconut mix designed for "touchy tummies."

Fresh pet food is another area of dramatic growth; supermarkets are adding refrigerated sections where protein and vegetable combos from companies like FreshPet are offered in tubs or slice-and-serve form.

Some pet owners have opted to reduce or eliminate grains, soy, corn or wheat because of allergy concerns. Solomon says only a small percentage of pets have such allergies.

But certain breeds are prone to diseases that may require special diets, she says. Pet owners should contact a canine nutritionist or veterinarian for advice.

If Fido or Fluffy doesn't really need poached squab, what's the best way to meet their nutritional needs?

"The main thing you want to be concentrating on is a complete meal, with a good balance of micronutrients and protein, that's easy to digest and meets the pet's needs," says Solomon.

REVIEW

F-150 takes over roles friends used to have

Stephen Elmer
AutoGuide.com

No longer do you need a second set of eyes to check your trailer lights; the F-150 will do it for you. Need a buddy to hold a flashlight so you can work in the dark? Nope. The truck's mirror-mounted spotlights and bed-mounted LED lights will take care of illuminating your work.

Trying to back up a big trailer by yourself? Ford's new truck even makes that a breeze with almost no experience necessary.

The truck can even give you a massage. Now, if only the F-150 could pick up the next round of beers, it might be an even better friend than most!

Though its all-new aluminum body stole the headlines when the redesigned F-150 hit the market, the changes to this truck are more than just skin deep. And the strength of this package starts with the powertrain.

Our test truck came equipped with Ford's 2.7-litre EcoBoost V6, a turbocharged unit that is billed as a smaller and more economical option than the top-dog 3.5-litre EcoBoost. It makes 325 hp, but burying the throttle launches the truck with much more force than the numbers suggest.

In fact, gun to my head, I might be hard pressed to tell you if it is the 2.7-litre or the 3.5-litre engine providing power when the trucks are unloaded.

Besides being fast without a load, the turbos help to bring the torque on low in the rev range, providing good pulling power to get your trailer or payload on the move. The only downside to EcoBoost — and it has been since the first version of Ford's turbocharged engines were introduced — is fuel economy. While the official ratings peg this truck at 8.1 km/L combined, seeing averages of closer to 7.2 km/L isn't uncommon.

What really stands out on the F-150 is its handling. More so than any other half-ton pickup truck, the F-150 corners nice and tight, feeling light on its feet.

Big, heavy vehicles have a tendency to push wide through long sweeping corners, whereas the F-150 tucks in and urges you to keep on turning the wheel.

If it was pickup truck day at the race track, the F-150 will most certainly provide the most fun and least understeer.

For 2016, there is a new system that can't be ignored; Pro Trailer Backup Assist.

In short, the system allows you to control the movement of a trailer using a dash-mounted knob. And it works great. It takes the crossed wires out of reversing, with the left turn of the knob sending the rear of the trailer to the left.

As my dad always told me, it's better to work smart than work hard, and the F-150 is a genius when it comes to all those things that can make a hard day's work breeze by.

BMW 7 Series' super-fancy technology is next level

Mike Schlee
AutoGuide.com

Of course, like any good flagship luxury sedan, the new 7 Series comes with all the expected technology like adaptive cruise control, head-up display, highly adjustable front power seats and a heated steering wheel. But from there, things get a bit crazy.

Available items include BMW's night vision system, active steering, an on-board Wi-Fi hotspot, dual digital display screens up front and 360 view cameras. The driver can also use gesture controls to control basic infotainment system functions. Because pushing actual buttons? That's for plebes!

To keep occupants amused, there's a 1,400-watt Bowers & Wilkins diamond sound system that includes 16 speakers, many of which can be backlit for a bit of added flair at night. And while on the topic of lighting, fully customizable accent lighting is available as well as a sky lounge LED roof that has thousands of LED lights built into the dual moon roof.

Rear seat passengers can be entertained by dual seat back entertainment screens that can also be used to control many of the car's primary functions. There is also a seven-inch touchscreen between the two rear seats that operates many of the same functions.

But we're not done yet. Completing the uber luxurious 750i are over-the-top features. There's the ambient air package that allows occupants to spritz one of two scents into the cabin at varying levels of strength. Then there's the massive display key that includes a mini touchscreen to relay various amounts of information and control to the driver when not at the car. And finally, in some markets, the 7 Series can park itself into a garage remotely without anyone actually being inside the car.

Why would anyone ever want to get out of the car?

From the 14-speaker sound system to adjustable air suspension to filter out most road imperfections, the 7 Series takes its tech very seriously. BMW/HANDOUT

Experience is the key to landing your dream job

Finding a good job after graduation can be a job in of itself, and finding work related to your field of study while still in school can seem like a nearly impossible task.

But even if the work you are offered over summer or after classes doesn't seem to fit at all into your overall career path, the executive director of Winnipeg-based Youth Employment Services says don't be discouraged — take the job — the skills needed to help you land that dream job after graduation can be found anywhere.

"Any experience is good experience," Karen Velthuys says. "People often don't realize that no matter what you're doing, all of those skills are transferable into your chosen profession or into another job even if it doesn't seem to be related.

"If you ultimately want to be a lawyer, for example, but you're working retail in a store while going to school, you're still getting the chance to handle difficult customers and do critical thinking, that's all important experience."

The secret says Velthuys, is to make sure you relate those transferable skills and experiences earned while working on a resume and in an interview.

If you're lucky enough not to need a job to pay for books or tuition while in school, Velthuys says finding a volunteer position related to your field of study is often a whole lot easier than landing a paid career-related position before graduation.

"For instance if you want to be a veterinarian then you go volunteer at the Humane Society where you can get some experience with that piece that you're looking at transitioning into once you're finished university or college," she says. "You're still getting skills, and developing skills, and honing skills to take into paid employment."

As for landing a job while in school Velthuys says the hidden job market — a job not posted online, but found with the help of friends and family — is a good place to start.

Youth Employment Services is a not-for-profit charity that offers free employment services for Manitobans aged 16-29 including help preparing resumes and cover letters, interview preparation, and job search assistance. For more information go to youthemploymentservices.com.

SMALLER CLASS SIZES PUTS THE FOCUS ALL ON THE STUDENTS

With small class sizes and one-on-one attention from well-qualified instructors Patal International College is an ideal path for post-secondary students looking to get the skills they need to start a career in a high-demand field.

After trying larger post-secondary options but never feeling like he'd made the right choice, Kyle Richard says he's felt right at home with the smaller class sizes at Patal since starting in the Culinary Arts and Entry Level Baking programs this spring.

"I was just going from dead-end job to dead-end job and then finally I found out about Patal and realized this place really focuses on students," says the 25-year-old.

Richard says having between 10 and 15 students in his classes makes a big difference.

"Other colleges have thousands of people there, but Patal is awesome because it's one-on-one with the teachers," he says. "At other schools I felt shy about putting my hand up in front of a hundred other people... but here you're right there with your teacher."

Patal International College has been offering courses and programs in high-demand fields since 1986 which means they've formed many work experience partnerships within the business community to both

Flexible start times to start your career as a hairstylist

CONTRIBUTED

If you're interested in a career as a hairstylist the Manitoba Institute of Trades and Technology (MITT) offers flexible class times that will leave you a cut above the rest no matter what time of day you're free to go to school.

And because MITT is publicly funded to provide high school students with vocational training using a full complement of the most modern equipment in a full-service salon, hairstyling instructor Mary Elliot says post-secondary students can take advantage of the top-of-line equipment, facility, and instruction at a fraction of the cost.

"The program and facilities are already here for the high school students so we can subsidize it by making the tuition less for adult students," explains Elliot. "Our price is in the $6,000 range, while the private schools go up to about $18,000.

"That's why we became so busy that we started a day and evening program."

The day program runs from 8:45 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. and the evening program runs from 3:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. and Elliot says no matter which stream students choose they'll receive the same high-level of instruction.

"They're the same length, they have the same program delivery — everything is the same, just in different time slots," says Elliot, who's taught both the day and evening programs during her nearly 25-years at MITT. "In hairstyling and salons a lot of the clientele is evening and weekends so to run a school in the day and the evening helps students get ready for that lifestyle."

The year-long program gives students the opportunity to practice and perform all types of top styling techniques, including men's and women's cuts, and colour and chemical texture service, and take advantage of a work practicum while earning their certificate.

And because the program is fully accredited with Apprenticeship Manitoba, Elliot says hairstyling students at MITT qualify for grants worth as much as $4,500.

"It's a great opportunity," she says. "This is your start, and then you go out and get a job, finish your apprenticeship levels, and then really get almost all your money back."

STANLEY CUP FINAL

Tendency to cede opener has San Jose on ropes in Pitt

If there is one stat that stands out as the reason the San Jose Sharks face elimination Thursday in Game 5 of the Stanley Cup final, it's this: They have yet to play with the lead in the series.

The Penguins have scored the opening goal in all four games and have not trailed in almost 255 minutes. Their only loss came in overtime in Game 3. The Sharks understand they have to play something other than catch-up hockey.

"I think we've got to find a way to (score) early and put them in the spot where they're chasing the game a little bit, which we haven't done yet," Sharks coach Pete DeBoer said during a conference call Tuesday.

"They've been good with the lead so far," San Jose captain Joe Pavelski said. "We've battled back, but ... when we've had the lead (earlier in the playoffs), we know what it feels like and you take a little confidence from it."

As the series moved back to Pittsburgh for Game 5 on Thursday, the question for DeBoer and the Sharks is how do they get that elusive lead? Juggle the lineup? Change the lines?

"I don't know if switching the lines up is the answer to

Martin Jones and the San Jose Sharks have yet to gain the lead in regulation versus Pittsburgh. EZRA SHAW/GETTY IMAGES getting the lead," DeBoer said. "We've shortened the bench the last two games because we've been behind. It's not ideal. (It) catches up to you, especially when you're this deep into the playoffs and have played as many games as we have and logged as many miles as we have."

"There's a saying that you dance with the girl you brought to the dance. I think that's going to probably be our approach."

It might not be the greatest vote of confidence ever heard with a championship on the line, but San Jose's leaders

“There is no magic answer.”

Sharks coach Pete DeBoer

haven't exactly inspired much confidence. The Sharks have a mere seven goals through four games. Their scoring leader through four games is defenceman Justin Braun, with two. None of their big guns — Pavelski, Joe Thornton, Logan Couture and Brent Burns — have managed to beat Penguins rookie goalie Matt Murray.

"You know, I'm more frustrated with the wins and losses more than anything," Pavelski told reporters after Game 4. "It's different if we're (up) 3-1, and you don't have anything. That's a different story. But, right now, with the hole we're (in) ... you know a goal or two probably changes the outcome. The way it's been going for most of the post-season, I feel like I should probably have a little bit more. So you just keep going."

While Pavelski keeps plugging away — he launched the puck at the net seven times in Game 4 — Joe Thornton has been more of a puzzle. Granted, he thinks of passing first, but he's had only one game where he shot on or at the net (including misses and blocked shots) more than three times.

And Couture in Game 4 managed just two shots on net, and another that missed. That was his highest shot-attempts total so far in the final.

"It's not an easy game," Couture said. "It's pretty tough out there to score goals. Guys are trying. We're getting chances. If we keep getting chances, you've got to believe that it's going to start going in."

Fan favourite brawler Kimbo Slice passes away in Fla.

Kimbo Slice, the bearded street fighter who parlayed his Internet popularity into a mixed martial arts career and worldwide fame, has died. He was 42.

Slice, whose real name was Kevin Ferguson, was taken to a hospital in Margate, Fla., near his home Monday, Coral Springs Police Sgt. Carla Kmiotek said.

The cause of death was still unclear. Kmiotek said there is no active police investigation, and no foul play is suspected.

Love misses Cavs practice

Already underdogs and down 2-0, the Cavaliers may also be undermanned for Game 3 of the NBA Finals Wednesday.

The Cavs practised Tuesday without starting forward Kevin Love, who is following concussion protocol after being struck in the back of the head by Golden State's Harrison Barnes during Game 2 Sunday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pirates hand Matz rare loss

Jon Niese pitched seven scoreless innings against his former team and Josh Harrison had three hits as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Mets 3-1 on Tuesday in the first game of a doubleheader.

The Pirates snapped Steven Matz's seven-game winning streak.

Stephen moves to safety after an injury to all-star Butler

Courtney Stephen is unfazed by the challenge before him at the Hamilton Tiger-Cats training camp.

The six-foot, 199-pound native of Brampton, Ont., is making the shift from cornerback to free safety. Stephen is being counted upon to fill the huge void in Hamilton's secondary created by the loss of all-star Canadian Craig Butler (knee), who's expected to miss the entire 2016 campaign.

"I consider myself a football player so wherever they put me on the field I'll do my best to adapt," Stephen said. "They could put me at long-snapper and I'd figure it out and get it done for the team."

"Luckily I've got experience playing (safety). So far it has been good."

Stephen played safety in 2013, his first season with Hamilton. However, there's much more communicating involved there than at corner, which means trying to be heard over Simoni Lawrence, Hamilton's colourful and always animated middle linebacker.

"I know it sounds like noise from the outside but we know that's our energy right there," Stephen said. "We need all those voices to be loud and confident on game day so we're just getting our practise in right now."

"It's a bit more vocal back there. You're going to be involved a little bit more than when you're out on the island (at cornerback). But the type of defence we play we're inter-dependant on each other so it's nothing too different. I've just got to be a different cog in the wheel back there."

Broncos to get closer look at Talib's wound

The Denver Broncos are awaiting Aqib Talib's return to team headquarters Wednesday so they can begin charting the cornerback's recovery from a gunshot wound to his right leg.

Talib was shot in Dallas over the weekend and missed the Super Bowl champions' visit to the White House.

No arrests have been made and police continue to investigate the shooting. WFAA-TV in Dallas said that according to police, the bullet entered Talib's right thigh and exited his right calf. Such a trajectory suggests he could have shot himself.

The Broncos believe he'll make a full recovery, but Talib,

RECIPE Salmon Tray Bake

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

There is no better strategy to get dinner on the table than to cook everything together. It's why we love a tray bake, especially this one since it delivers roasted flavor for the veggies and potatoes and flakey salmon.

Ready in
Prep time: 10 minutes
Serves: 4

Ingredients

- 2 new potatoes
- 3 Tbsp olive oil
- 2 tsp fresh or dried thyme
- Salt and pepper
- 4 salmon filets
- 1 bundle of asparagus, washed and trimmed
- 20 cherry tomatoes
- Big squeeze of lemon juice

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 375 F.
2. Line a rimmed baking sheet with parchment.
3. Thinly slice potatoes and scatter them across baking sheet. Season with 2 tbsp of olive oil, pinch of salt, pepper and thyme. Place in oven for 15 minutes.
4. Remove tray from oven. Increase heat to 400 degrees. Lay the salmon filets over the potatoes and add the asparagus and tomatoes. Return to oven for 10 to 15 minutes, or until salmon is cooked.
5. Remove from oven. Squeeze lemon juice over the whole pan and serve.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is the perfect day to plan a vacation or make plans regarding the education of children. You might begin the necessary factual foundation for a creative project.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Sit down with family members to plan how to improve your home or how to help a family member. People are in a sensible mood.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You're in a practical frame of mind, which is why this is a good day to tackle routine tasks you have been avoiding. Roll up your sleeves and get down to it.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If shopping today, you will want to buy only long-lasting, practical items. You also will work hard, with a thought of saving for the future.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
The Moon is in your sign today, which makes you more emotional than usual. This also makes you luckier than usual. Use this to your advantage!

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
This is an excellent day to do research, because you will persevere and find what you're looking for. You'll be like a dog with a bone!

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Listen to the advice of someone more experienced today, because it will be valuable. After all, you don't have to reinvent the wheel. (Plus, you don't have to follow what he or she says.)

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You make a great impression on bosses, parents, teachers and VIPs today. Because you are conscientious and hard-working, they will love you!

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
This is a great day to study or finish a school paper. You will make great headway in matters related to publishing, the media, medicine and the law.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Use today's energy to clear away loose details regarding taxes, debt, insurance matters and inheritances. Listen to someone's advice about shared property.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
This is a good day to sit down with spouses, partners and close friends and have a serious discussion about practical matters. You will see that by keeping things orderly, it will be easier for everyone in the future.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
It's easy to work hard today, because you have the right mind-set. Physical discomfort is less important. Getting the job done is what matters.
